hisrideon was cut in the breast and face and us hadly bruised when picked up by the time. He told a thrilling story of an encounter with train robbers, who, he said, nearly liked him. The supposition is he inflicted the injuries himself. In October, 1892, Richardson flagged a Union Rediction between Baker City and Pendieton, when it was about to run into a boulder on the track. He received a reward from the passengers. The company suspected that he rolled the boulder on the track, but they had no conclusive evidence. Before Richardson was taken from the hospital last night Superintendent field of the Southern Pacific and the superintendent of a detective agency had an interriew with him. They endeavored to secure a confession from him and were partly successful. He admitted that he rolled the boulder on the Union Pacific track, but answered evasively when asked if he removed the rall from the Southern Pacific track.

Weser's Work for the World's Fair. The new School of Applied Design for months has on exhibition an interesting lot of the work of its students, which is to be sent to the World's Fair as part of the display in the woman's building. Three of the rooms of the school building at 200 West Twenty-third he sebool building at 260 West Twenty-third street are filled, and altogether there are about 200 designs. Many are, of course, largely imitative work, but even these are executed with much skill, and there are others whose originality is striking. Among the latter are some of the designs for stone and iron gateways in the architectural exhibit. The designs include patterns for silk weaving, for yall papers, olicioths, tiles, curtains and hangings, book covers, and fans.
